The Flesh of the Improved Hog. National Live Stock Journal.

Swine breeders have not sufficiently borne in mind the variation in the amount of lean meat found in the carcasses of different hogs. Berkshire is universally credited with having more lean than any other breed; but even Berkshires vary in this regard, as do all other classes of swine. Hence, by closely scanning the cut up carcasses, giving preference to certain families showing liberal presence of muscular substance, these to be used as breeders, the relative quantity of lean could be increased in any family or breed.
